QUAINT CUSTOMS.

Many Still Prevails in England in Inaugurating Mayors.

Some quaint customs are observed in connection with the induction into office of the new occupant of the mayoral chair. The mayor of Lincoln is duly elected by the placing upon his finger of an ancient ring which his predecessors have worn for centuries. This ring possesses a curious power, for when the mayor sends it to any school within the city the schoolmaster is bound to give his pupils a holiday for the day. A similar custom prevails at Chichester, an ancient town in England used in this case. The chief magistrate of Chichester is also armed with a gold-mounted mace. At York, both the lord mayor and lady mayoress are equipped with a silver-mounted oak staff, which have marked their authority for centuries. Moreover the lady mayoress enjoys the distinction of being the only lady in the land provided with a chain of office by the corporation. She is also entitled to retain the prefix "Lady" for the remainder of her life. There is a local rhyme which says:

The mayor is a lord for a year
But his wife is a lady for ever and aye.

At Brightlingsea, a limb of the Cinque port, the ceremony attaching to the election of mayor has taken place in the parish church itself from time immemorial.

The retiring mayor of Bournemouth, on investing his successor with the civic regalia, confirms him into office with an old-time loving kiss. The new mayor is given a sword and a chain of office.

The Vermont Marble Co., Proctor, made its annual distribution of the essentials for a Thanksgiving dinner to its employees, twelve hundred families being reached. There were 1,200 turkeys, thirty barrels of cranberries and sixty-five barrels of sweet potatoes given away at the different plants of the concern.

The mayor of Dumfries has to submit to a somewhat trying ordeal. Immediately after his election, the chief magistrate, aldermen and councillors, headed by a brass band, proceed to the nearest point of the boundary, which happens to be in the middle of a ploughed field. Here a huge crowd surrounds a post. The bellman clangs his bell for order, the charter of the burgh is read and the mayor is lifted by stalwart arms, lifted and "bumped" vigorously on the top of the post. This process is repeated at every point of the boundary, so that when the ceremony is concluded the mayor has every reason to remember exactly where the borders of his jurisdiction cease.

Directly after electing the new mayor at High Wycombe, the members of the town council adjourn to the borough offices of weights and measures, where the new occupant of the mayoral chair, and each alderman and councillor is publicly weighed, and these records form one of the treasures stored in the municipal archives. The Lord Mayor of Birmingham is required to pose before the photographer immediately after his election, and a copy, together with a few biographical details, is placed in an album containing portraits of all the gentlemen who have occupied seats on the council, and this finds a place in the municipal library.

A general holiday is observed at New Castle-under-York on Nov. 9, when the newly elected mayor is publicly proclaimed from the famous market cross, a custom which has been followed since the first mayor was elected for the honor 750 years ago.

The picturesque ceremony of electing the new Lord Mayor of London takes place some weeks before Nov. 9 and is preceded by a religious service at St. Lawrence Jewry, the parish church of the civic chamber. This service has been held continuously for more than five hundred years. The Lord Mayor, sheriff and aldermen, in their glittering chains of office, scarlet robes and each carrying a nosegay of autumn flowers, assemble at the Guildhall and march to the church in procession. Subsequent to the service the procession returns to the Guildhall, which is strewed with sweet herbs, where the Lord Mayor, aldermen and officers take their places on the hustings. The business of the election is presided over by the common crier's proclamation that all persons be uncovered, and that all those who are not lunatics shall be present. Attorney E. H. O'Brien, who is his counsel, stands in court that his client would not only deny the charge, but that he would claim that he was not insane. An expert has been ordered by the court to make an examination of the respondent in behalf of the defense.

Kent Back in WATERBURY.

Alleged Murderer of Delia A. Congdon Recommitted to Asylum.

Butchard, Nov. 28.—Elviro Kent, who has been confined in the county jail during the past month and who is charged with murder in the first degree has been taken to the state insane asylum at Waterbury where he will remain during his winter for observation. He was accompanied to Waterbury by Deputy Sheriff A. A. Leonard of Wallingford, the officer who conducted the hunt for him three months ago and who has had him in charge since his capture.

Kent is accused of the murder of Miss Delia A. Congdon at her home in East Wallingford on the night of July 18. He was at liberty for more than two months, finally being captured at Pittsfield, Mass. When arraigned in county court this term he pleaded not guilty. He was formerly an inmate in the state insane asylum at Waterbury and the court decided that he had better be recommitted there for observation.

Attorney E. H. O'Brien, who is his counsel, stated in court that his client would not only deny the charge, but that he would claim that he was not insane. An expert has been ordered by the court to make an examination of the respondent in behalf of the defense.
